

I. CHARACTER DESCRIPTION:

the child has a good middle class background, has nice manners and is tenderly brought up. Father is a construction engineer, mother worked as a typist in the last years at home. The family is settled in Stamford, Conn. where father holds a well paid job with a construction company. Mother does not work.

Subject has an elder sister who bosses her around and in my opinion gives the child an inferiority complex. Unfortunately, despite my hints, the mother was present at the interview and so was the sister, and I felt somehow that the child was inhibited by their presence.

With her again I found that the memory of her school days at home are already blurred and are getting mixed up with her experiences at school here in the United States.

This girl is very childish (even the mother admits it), and less bright than an average nine year old would be. I found this interview extremely unsatisfactory, but hope to have more luck with other kids of this age.
