29. Respondent's experiences were confined to homemaking without an acute awareness of ideological questions. Her husband's income as an accepted operatic singer was high above the average wage earner's income and thus her social and economic status placed her in a position only a very few had enjoyed in the Communist regime. Her approach to the problems was very personal and limited to her husband's career insofar as her role was "the wife of a noted singer," and one of the ten best-dressed women of Hungary.
31. "10" No. None.
32. "9" In political and social conditions respondent was poorly informed and had attempted to cover it in a rather charming way by guessing.
