14- US Getting Bonus From Refugees

Camp Kilmer, n. j., Jan. 31 (ins) -- the u.s. is getting a surprise bonus from the hungarian refugee program in the form of top scientific and engineering talent.

075

many are healthy, highly-trained and young. gen. j. lawton collins, vice chairman of president eisenhowers committee for refugee relief, predicts they will play an important part in relieving the u.s.s serious scientific manpower shortage.

the latest figures of the immigration and naturalization service show that well over one-fourth of the refugees are scientific personnel or college level students.

so much scientific talent was spotted going through the freedom pipeline stretching from the austro-hungarian border to the camp kilmer reception center that a special office was set up to re-locate these professionals in the u.s. scientific community.

this office, under the sponsorship of the national academy of sciences, has so far registered 294 hungarian scientists. these are the cream of the cream. they have been described by academy officials as a "whos who" of hungarian professional, academic and research life.

the academys function is to get these professionals into the right jobs--where they can make a maximum contribution to u.s. society and pick up the pieces of their own shattered included in the "whos who" so far screened and classified are 58 medical doctors, including many university professors and researchers= 37 chemical engineers= 34 lawyers, economists and accountants= 31 mechanical engineers= 31 post-doctorate level technicians= 25 civil and construction engineers= 19 post-graduate science researchers= 16 electrical engineers= 12 geotechnicians= 12 forestry, mining and oil engineers= six mathematicians and physicians and three biologists their long leap from Hungarian life to responsible positions in the U.S. scientific community is made easier by special orientation courses in U.S. life, languages and history. they live in dormitories and attend special classes at nearby Rutgers University. C-76 after eight weeks of intensive study, these scientists will move on to positions arranged by the Academy on the basis of a thorough-going interview and screening process. some will go right into university and industry research labs, others will receive special university fellowships.

students are being aided by the Institute of International Education, which reports over 500 American colleges and universities have offered one or more scholarships to qualified Hungarian students.

to prepare them for college in the U.S., the Institute has set up American civilization and language training courses at Saint Michaels College, Colchester, Vt., and Bard College, Annandale-on-the-Hudson, N.Y.

trained technicians and skilled semi-professional workers are processed in up-to-date electronic fashion. individual qualifications and job skills recorded during an interview are placed on coded punch cards and run through an IBM processor.

matched against job openings by the machine, a suggested disposition for employment form comes tumbling out of IBM for each individual.

Washington, Jan. 17 (AP) — The United States is ready to provide additional American aid to prevent any slowdown in the movement of Hungarian refugees from Austria.

Officials said the money will be given to the inter-governmental committee for European migration which is handling the transportation of the thousands of refugees who have crowded into Austria since the October revolt.

The executive board of the ICOM is now meeting in Geneva. The group has reported a "desperate" financial shortage after moving some 95,000 refugees from Austria in the past few months. Reports from Geneva quoted Pierre Jacobsen, deputy director of ICOM, as saying that unless more money is provided the flow of refugees will have to halt in a few days.

Administration officials said that instructions have been sent to Geneva authorizing an increase in the U.S. contribution.

They emphasized that there will be no stoppage of the movement of refugees out of Austria because of lack of money.

Jacobsen reportedly told the executive board that contributions for the proposed $55 million dollar ICOM budget for 1957 are two million dollars short of the total needed.

Washington sources declined to disclose the extent of the additional American contribution, but it is presumed that it will make up about 45 per cent of the deficit.

The U.S. has been contributing to ICOM at about that rate, with the other 25 member governments providing the balance.

The ICOM funds are not being used to pay for transportation of refugees to the United States, Canada and Venezuela. These three countries have agreed to pay all the bills bringing Hungarians to their shores.

ICOM plans to move 30,000 Hungarians out of Europe in 1957. There are about 70,000 refugees still in Austrian camps. More are coming across the border every day.
