Open Society Archives at Central European University

OPEN SOCIETY ARCHIVES (OSA), established in 1995 by George Soros, is an independent international archival institution affiliated with the Central European University in Budapest, Hungary. OSA obtains, preserves and makes available to public research resources in three main areas: the history of communism and cold war, particularly in Central and Eastern Europe; human rights issues and movements with particular emphasis on the second half of the twentieth century; and the philanthropic activities of the Soros foundations network and the activity of the Central European University.

REFERENCE INFORMATION PAPERS (RIP), compiled by staff archivists, are thematic finding aids aiming to guide researchers to all the relevant archival materials at OSA that relate to a certain topic. Issues of the RIP series are published irregularly, and always reflect the status quo of the holdings. The catalogue entries indicate the exact fonds reference, date span, approximate quantity, and, occasionally, medium of the records.

Non-Discrimination Policy

The Central European University does not discriminate on the basis of – including but not limited to – race, color, national and ethnic origin, religion, gender or sexual orientation in administering its educational policies, admission policies, scholarship and loan programs, and athletic and other school-administered programs.

Introduction

The preservation of archival material related to human rights violations serves a far more important purpose than the mere storage of information for scientific purposes. Education and scholarly research are, no doubt, means by which serious breaches of basic human rights, and the factors generating them, can be examined and possibly understood. But just as vital, if not more so, is the question of accountability: the need for those who commit such acts to be held responsible for what they did. The international courts, truth and reconciliation commissions and other similar organizations base their work on evidence and on well-kept and available documentation. It would be an inexcusably generous gesture towards perpetrators to let this evidence sink into oblivion.

Understanding the "archival imperative" to preserve human rights records, OSA extended its initial mission in order to enhance awareness, documentation and education about ethnic conflicts, war crimes, genocide and identity restoration. In line with its acquisition policy, OSA works in close cooperation with various human rights organizations, NGOs and individuals to identify and acquire collections whose preservation is of the utmost importance. Furthermore, OSA envisages becoming a major regional influence on the formulation of information policies with respect to freedom of expression and rights to information.

Accordingly, OSA's holdings have more than doubled since the year of its foundation, and now embrace materials relating to human rights movements and issues, informational rights and various contemporary policy issues, to which the meticulously compiled thematic finding aid on the following pages is intended to give guidance. Nevertheless, materials dealing with related or overlapping topics such as freedom of religion, environmental rights and protection, censored and banned artists, Roma issues, forced labor, minority rights, etc. have not been included here, since they either figure in previous issues of our Reference Information Papers (RIP) series or are likely topics for forthcoming ones. [For more information on the Reference Information Papers see www.osa.ceu.hu/publications/index.shtml]

OSA holds further collections, which for various reasons (involving processing status and the establishment of terms of access and restriction) do not yet figure on its fonds list. Of primary importance are the records pertaining to the Bosnia Project of the Physicians for Human Rights, a Boston-based human rights organization that conducted mass grave exhumations in Bosnia between 1996 and 1999 and deposited the accumulated documentation (forensic reports, memos, correspondence and photographs totaling 13 linear meters) with us. A very recent acquisition is the collection of the journalist David Rohde, who conducted on-site investigations in the Srebrenica area and was the first to report on the massacre in a series of articles that brought him the Pulitzer Prize in 1996. The background materials he gathered include mission files, notebooks, testimonies, correspondence and also audiovisual material.

Finally, a few words about accruals and projects for the near future. The International Monitor Institute, whose mission was to identify and acquire (audio) visual "evidence of human rights violations and the circumstances that produce them", is closing down its Archives and decided to donate its immense video-collection (more than 3,000 items) to OSA. Later on this fall, in cooperation with the Martus Project of the Benetech Initiative, OSA will set up and operate a server for hosting encrypted information prepared and sent by human rights organizations working in dangerous environment under difficult conditions.

HU OSA 300-85 Soviet Samizdat Archives

1968-1991, 177.9 lm

In the former Soviet Union, starting with the 1960s, samizdat meant underground issues (belles-lettres, political essays, public appeals, letters to the Soviet leadership), which could not be officially published because of censorship, thus were spread secretly, from person to person, very often at a great risk. For almost 30 years, RFE/RL were collecting samizdat materials relating to attempts of Soviet public to influence the state policy and mostly dealing with human rights issues. Samizdat and RFE/RL, as the most operative of its propagandists, happened to play a very significant role in the development of the Soviet society and the history of the human rights movement.

The Soviet Samizdat Archives contains materials of the following types: copies of samizdat documents created in the former Soviet Union and then smuggled to the West (and also their reproductions); indexes to the Samizdat materials (some of them are available in electronic format, too); records relating to samizdat, which were collected by the Samizdat Unit staff for reference purposes (clippings, transcripts of Radio Liberty broadcast, abstracts of media reports); collection of unofficial publications from the former Soviet Union during the Perestroika period. Audio-visual materials are also included in the Samizdat Archives.
